New audio console is a nostalgic blend of 1970s and modern tech

SAE Creative Media Institute is delighted to welcome the Custom Series 75 audio console to its Byron Bay campus. The console is a nostalgic throwback to decks from the 1970s, with all the infrastructure of modern state-of-the-art equipment. To celebrate the launch, a ribbon cutting of the console will take place on Friday 11 February at 2pm (AEDT), at SAE Byron Bay.

The console was designed and built in the Byron Bay Industrial estate by Neve Manufacturing, and will join 10 other state-of-the-art music studios at SAE's Byron Bay campus.

Head designers, Bruce McBean and Stephen Crane, are two of the most respected and sought-after audio technicians in Australia, and worked closely with a tight knit team of audio and music specialists, including SAE's Audio Department Coordinator Dirk Terrill, and audio lecturers, Jan Muths and James Lyall.

SAE General Manager, Dr Luke McMillan was excited to see the arrival of the innovative new console. "It's a fantastic addition to our existing suite of audio consoles for students and staff to enjoy. The console is a throwback hybrid of audio consoles that includes a more modern topology, allowing for a blend of modern contemporary production with classic 1970s sound.

"SAE is one of the oldest and most prestigious educational providers in the world for audio engineering - having been founded in 1976. Our continual investment in state-of-the-art equipment, resources and quality teaching is why we continue to be market leaders in creative media education."

The opening of the new Custom Series 75 audio console, takes place on Friday 11 February at 2pm (AEDT) at SAE Byron Bay, 373-391 Ewingsdale Road.
